A BARNYARD RODEO

A cat riding a goat awakens some cats asleep on the roof of a barn. A dog asleep and snoring is unconscious of the flea running around on him. The flea with his spyglass locates a particular spot and immediately bites the dog who is awakened and runs. A pig riding a chicken passes on his way to the rodeo. The spectators, sitting on logs, see the dog come bucking in. He goes backward and forward until the flea falls to the ground. An ambulance removes him and the dog goes on his way. A mouse rides in on a cat's tail. The cat bucks mouse off. The mouse then takes a rope, lassoes cat's tail, pulls it off and then tosses it back on again. They exit. The cats on the log cheer as the feline Till Rogers enters. He does stunts with a rope and lassoes some mice which a dog has let out of a trap. The last mouse escapes and runs away holding his hat in the air. The cat lassoes the hat and then its owner. The crowds cheer wildly. In the excitement the farmer is kicked over by the cow he is milking. And the rodeo, Senor Tornalli, Mexico's greatest bull tosser is introduced. He takes his bow and then the bull is let loose. The mouse announces him as "Firporina", the toughest heifer's daddy that ever strayed from the pampas. The bull takes his bow and then the fight is on. The cat is chased around the ring but finally he twists the bull's head. It comes off and proves to be a fake bull made up of cats. The real bull seeing this is maddened and starts in pursuit of the bull thrower. The entire audience follows and Mexico's greatest bull thrower soon learns, "He who throws the bull should know his audience".
